New Mexico State Parks Offers Free Day Use Admission for Furloughed Federal Workers

Santa Fe, NM – New Mexico State Parks is offering free day use to furloughed federal workers during the government shutdown. Statewide, there are 34 parks which provide great recreational opportunities and educational programs and events for visitors and families.

"State parks are wonderful resources for outdoor recreation, learning and community events," Gov. Michelle Lujan Grisham said. "We want this federal shutdown to end as quickly as possible, but in the meantime, we're taking action wherever we can to remind federal professionals in New Mexico that they are highly valued members of our communities."

Furloughed federal workers will need to provide federal identification to State Park staff for free day use admission. Visit nmparks.com to find a park near you.
