State Parks Announces Timeline for Reopening Most Remaining Parks

Additional Parks to reopen for day-use on May 30th and June 1st

Santa Fe – Today the Energy, Minerals and Natural Resources Department’s (EMNRD) State Parks Division announces nine additional State Parks reopening for day-use only beginning May 30th. An additional five Parks will open June 1st. Overnight use and campgrounds remain closed and all events through June 19th have been canceled. In addition, there will be capacity limits at many reopened State Parks.

The additional parks open for day-use beginning May 30th are: El Vado Lake, Leasburg Dam, Percha Dam, Heron Lake, Eagle Nest Lake, Conchas Lake, Santa Rosa Lake, Bottomless Lakes, and Sugarite Canyon State Parks. On June 1st Hyde Memorial, Rio Grande Nature Center, Navajo Lake, Elephant Butte Lake, and Pecos Canyon State Parks will reopen for day-use.

Camping reservations will be cancelled and refunded through June 19th. When visiting a State Park it is encouraged to use exact change when paying the day-use fee to minimize contact with staff.

“As we move forward with our phased reopening of State Parks our rangers will be on hand to model safe practices such as wearing masks and gloves,” said State Parks Director Christy Tafoya. “Our staff will educate the public about staying in groups of 5 or less, practicing social distance, and the proper use of PPE so everyone can have a safe visit. The parks will continue to be managed in line with the Centers for Disease Control and Occupational Safety and Health Administration guidelines to reduce the spread of COVID-19.”

Days and hours of park day-use openings vary across the system. For details on specific parks information visit the State Parks website and know before you go.

Information to verify before your visit:

- State Parks that are open to day-use access and specific hours of operation
